1980. . . . Their response to this trauma was to shift away from classical Marxism . . . and embrace the more diffuse and paranoia-driven theories of the Frankfurt School. . . . The writer who drops in on this world is bound to feel like Gulliver visiting the Royal Academy of Lagoda, with its solemn ‘projectors’ laboring to extract sunbeams from cucumbers.’

There are similar bons mots on almost every page, usually delivered with the wicked, almost catty, sharpness which is convention among today’s professional critics. Hughes skewers, among other things, Afrocentrism, postmodern architecture, and attacks on Christopher Columbus by erstwhile “Aztec nationalists”—many of the same subjects which have been critically surveyed in this magazine over the years. On the symptoms of the disease, Hughes is an entertainment; but on its causes, he is effectively silent. And, his prescription for a cure is worse than useless.

Hughes limits himself to his area of expertise. Art in America no longer serves the society, he says, because it has become a battleground between two “P.C.’s”—a leftist “politically correct,” and a right-wing “patriotically correct”—with each new attack by one side, causing an escalation by the other. The proposed solution is to cool out the fight by de-politicizing our museums, and by stopping neo-conservatives from using the National Endowment for the Arts as a political hobbyhorse. In this way, artworks will be stripped of their political cover, and will be forced to stand on their own merits.

I think that every reader would agree that the judgment of a work of art cannot be based on the artist’s allegiance to a political mafia. However, saying what good art isn’t, doesn’t tell you much about what good art is, and as Hughes pursues this aspect, he undoes everything useful in his previous polemic.

Is Art Scientific?

Hughes is a militant modernist; in fact, his 1981 book, The Shock of the New, was a very effective attempt to break down the last popular resistance to modernism in American culture. For two decades, Hughes has been celebrating modernism’s canonical belief that art’s purpose is not universal, but is primarily the exposition of the internal state of the artist, no matter how ugly, alienated, or lawless that internal state might be. “The appreciation of art and literature,” he notes in Complaint, “has no scientific basis whatever; one is dealing with the unquantifiable coin of feeling . . . .” This means that there can be political works of art, but Art (capital A) is not political.

“We know, in our heart of hearts,” Hughes adds, “that the idea that people are morally ennobled by contact with works of art is a pious fraud.” To prove that point, Hughes cites the case of Renaissance lord Sigismondo da Malatesta, who had the “excellent taste” to have Alberti, Duccio, and Piero della Francesca decorate his home, but yet remained a murderer and Satanist despite the brilliant art surrounding him.

Hughes’ point here is clearly pragmatic garbage! Certainly, Plato tutored the tyrant Dionysius; Leonardo painted for Cesare Borgia; and Beethoven...
Monetary Fund. Nor is any reference made to the soaring drug trade which began in Guatemala in the late 1970’s, as the country became transformed into a major cocaine transshipment center, and a producer of heroin and marijuana.

Instead, Menchú’s book offers only the imbicilic slogans concocted to justify “people’s revolutionary war” as the causes of all Guatemala’s problems: The “rich,” the Army, and Spanish colonizers of 500 years ago are the Enemy, simply because they are rich, in the Army, and not-Indian. As for solutions, I, Rigoberta is a call to arms against any and all attempts to alter the backwardness in which the majority of Guatemalans live, because this is “their” culture.

It is not incidental to this program of action that I, Rigoberta was put together by Burgos-Debray, the wife of that French theoretician of Ibero-American guerrilla warfare, Régis Debray, who in the 1960’s left his base in Havana to accompany Cuba’s Che Guevara in the mountains of Bolivia.

When Menchú was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in October 1992, the Guatemalan government and military were attacked by the international media for “lying” that Menchú, her family, and the “popular organizations” she was involved with, had anything to do with the avowedly Marxist terrorists in Guatemala. But in 1982, Menchú spoke freely about how she and her entire family worked with the guerrillas:

“The people have four politico-military armed organizations,” she explains in I, Rigoberta. “The Guerrilla Army of the Poor (EGP), the Organization of the People in Arms (ORPA), the Fuerzas Armadas Rebeldes (FAR), and the Guatemalan Workers Party (PCT). This is the nucleus of the national leadership. Our idea is to put into practice the methods initiated by the masses when they evolved their ‘people’s weapons’: to be able to make Molotov cocktails to fight their army. . . . We wanted to weaken the government economically, politically, and militarily.”

During her participation with the guerrillas, Menchú assumed the task of training villages in “self-defense” against the Army. Methods included using stones, traps, lime, and Molotov cocktails. “We’ve often used lime. Lime is very fine and you have to aim it in a certain way for it to go into someone’s eyes. . . . You can blind a policeman by throwing lime in his face. . . . We’d invented a sort of Molotov cocktail . . . this cocktail could burn two or three soldiers,” the future Peace Prize activist expounded.

A ‘Culture of Rage’

Her cause “wasn’t born out of something good, it was born out of wretchedness and bitterness,” Rigoberta Menchú twice tells Burgos-Debray. Repeatedly, throughout the book, Menchú speaks of the “hatred” which drives her sought-for “revolution.”

The central role played by rage and hatred provides a key to how this induced “indigenous struggle” has been organized, and points to its purpose: To ensure that rebellion against miserable conditions and inhuman treatment is turned against the nation-state and national institutions, and not into a movement for the development of all Guatemalans.

The message delivered in I, Rigoberta is that Indian “culture” rejects schools, modern agricultural methods, medicines, “all things modern.” The guerrillas compañeros who came to the mountains were trusted, because they “adapted to the conditions we live in. We can only love a person who eats what we eat,” Rigoberta proclaims; the mestizos “want to destroy us with medicines and other things,” such as food “made from machines.”

A Contrasting View

Students forced to read I, Rigoberta would do well to contrast it with Bridge Across Jordan, the autobiography of another woman, U.S. Civil Rights leader Amelia Boynton Robinson. In contrast to Menchú, Robinson dedicated her energies to trying to better those abandoned in poverty, to enable them to have access to the most advanced means possible, so that they, too, could make contributions to the development of the human race as a whole. Her efforts, like those of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., with whom she worked, were founded on the simple doctrine of “Love thy neighbor.” Her constant theme is that the hater, by hating, destroys himself. In contrast to Menchú, Robinson is often heard to say that the only race which she is proud to represent, is the human race.

—I. Gretchen Small

---

A MANUAL ON THE RUDIMENTS OF Tuning and Registration

BOOK I: Introduction and Human Singing Voice

From Tiananmen Square to Berlin, Beethoven’s Ninth Symphony was chosen as the “theme song” of the revolution for human dignity, because Beethoven’s work is the highest expression of Classical beauty. Now, for the first time, a Schiller Institute team of musicians and scientists, headed by Statesman and philosopher Lyndon H. LaRouche, Jr., presents a manual to teach the universal principles which underlie the creation of great works of Classical musical art.

$30 plus $4.50 shipping and handling

Schiller Institute, Inc. P.O. Box 20244, Washington, D.C. 20041-0244

or call Ben Franklin Booksellers (800)453-4108 (703)777-3661 fax (703)777-8287

Visa and MasterCard accepted. Virginia residents please add 4.5% sales tax.
Intelligence and morality are the measure of a man's mind. These offerings by the Schiller Institute and Executive Intelligence Review are designed to make you use your mind ... and then, to act!

Read them and Join the Renaissance!

Order from Schiller Institute, Inc.
P.O. Box 20244, Washington, D.C. 20041-0244

Toward a New Council of Florence

'On the Peace of Faith' and Other Works by Nicolaus of Cusa

Translated and with an Introduction by William F. Wertz, Jr.

New translations of 16 works by the great 15th-century theologian, Nicolaus of Cusa, the father of modern science. Twelve of the works never before translated into English.

Includes

On the Peace of Faith
On Conjectures
On the Hunt for Wisdom
On the Not-Other

$15 retail.

or order all these books from Ben Franklin Booksellers

107 S. King St., Leesburg, VA 22075

(800) 453-4108 (703) 777-3661; fax (703) 771-8287

Shipping: $3.50 first book, .50 each additional book

Visa and Mastercard accepted

---

Order from EIR News Service
P.O. Box 17390 Washington, D.C. 20041-0390

The Ugly Truth About the ADL

By the Editors of Executive Intelligence Review

The authoritative 152-page documentary profile of the Anti-Defamation League of B’nai Brith (ADL). The study, based on 14 years of investigative work, exposes the League as a front for the international dope lobby and reveals its links to former Communist bloc intelligence services and such diverse international terrorist organizations as the Jewish Defense League and the Ku Klux Klan.

$7.00 retail.

---

The Civil War and The American System

America’s Battle with Britain, 1860-1876

By Allen Salisbury

This groundbreaking study, originally written in 1978, has been reissued by Executive Intelligence Review because of the urgent need to defeat the British “free trade” policies that are ravaging the nation today.

Includes crucial works by American System authors:

* Henry C. Carey
* Abraham Lincoln
* William D. Kelley
* William Elder
* Stephen Colwell
* Mathew Carey

$15 retail.

---

TRAVESTY A True Crime Story:

The du Pont Kidnap Case and the LaRouche Railroad by an EIR Investigative Team

Hired thugs from the Cult Awareness Network are tried—and acquitted!—of conspiring to kidnap an heir to the du Pont fortune, just to stop him from practicing his political beliefs.

$8 retail