Join W. Europe, Eurasia To Rebuild the World LaRouche Webcast Defines U.S. National Mission

Speaking to diplomats and supporters gathered in New York City and Washington, D.C. via an international webcast on March 21, U.S. statesman and Democratic Presidential pre-candidate Lyndon H. LaRouche, Jr., provided his assessment of the first 60 days of the Bush Administration.

Bush's actions so far have been a disaster, LaRouche argued. His Presidency represents the legacy of the racist, anti-progress Southern Strategy, with at least three different political layers involved—the pro-Armageddon fundamentalists, the Iran-Contra killers, and the “professionals” like Rumsfeld, Cheney, and O'Neill. As a combination, they are irrationally pursuing public policies that will fail, such as energy deregulation, hospital shutdowns, and attempts to save the bankrupt financial system.

This disaster already has the Europeans very upset, LaRouche said, although no nation there will directly challenge the United States. The only hope the Europeans see is the possibility that Russian President Putin will embrace a policy of cooperation with Europe and the Asian nations, for long-term economic growth and development. If the United States were to join that partnership, it would provide the opportunity required. LaRouche was optimistic that pressure coming from inside the U.S., and from Europe, could force the institutions of the U.S. to “bring sense to the United States.”

To accomplish this, LaRouche said, “What we must have is a sense of national mission; the idea of the United States cooperating with Western Europe, with

Campaign Pamphlet Issued: 'Battle for the Common Good'

Lyndon LaRouche's 2004 Presidential campaign committee released a new mass pamphlet in late May, “Join LaRouche's Battle for the Common Good.”

The 24-page item features the three principal aspects of Democrat LaRouche's unified conception of the drive to restore the U.S. Constitution's principle of the General Welfare to both U.S. domestic and foreign policy practice today.

- The first of the pamphlet's three sections presents LaRouche's proposals for a New Bretton Woods reorganization of the financial system, and the fostering of Eurasian Land-Bridge development corridors, as the crucial elements needed to restart the world economy.

- The second section discusses the need for energy re-regulation, Chapter 11 bankruptcy procedures, and LaRouche's short-, medium-, and long-range programs for dealing with the crisis.

- Finally, as epitomized by the fight to save D.C. General Hospital, the pamphlet discusses how to defeat the Nazi “useless eater” approach to health care which has become dominant both in the U.S. and globally.
